

CYPRESS WOOD FENCING

The "WOOD ETERNAL"

To go to the source of this aristocrat of trees one would have to look back eighty million years.

All through the ages, Cypress has been picked as the wood to withstand time and the elements. The Egyptians used Cypress for their mummy cases. American Indians used Cypress for their dug-out canoes. The Seminole Indians gave to Cypress the name "Hatch-in-e-hae," a phrase which to them meant "everlasting." Houses that were built of Cypress over 300 years ago are still in excellent condition and giving good service today.

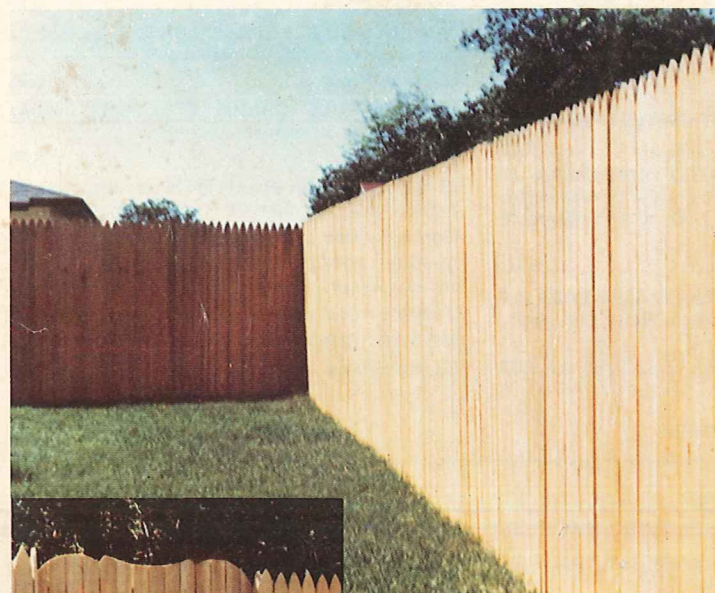

American Wood Products, Inc.

Cypress grows only in swamps and areas known to be most conducive to wood deterioration. So it must, for its own survival, develop a natural resistance to such things as rot, fungi, insects, etc.

Therefore, it stands to reason that a Cypress fence will give you the best, longest-lasting wood that you can get. Further, it will weather into a beautiful driftwood gray in time.
